The Business of the Corby Compressed Yeast Company, and Its Industrial Magnitude

The Corby Yeast Company gives employment to a large force of trained bacteriologists, chemists, etc., as well as to an army of clerical and mechanical employes. Its pay roll reaches $225,000 a year. During 1916 there were handled on its tracts 1,655 full carloads of freight, not including the enormous number of partial car shipments; and over 4,823,000 pounds of expressage were forwarded to its baker customers throughout the United States and Canada. In the operation of the plant 2,316 tons of coal were required.

From these figures can be seen the importance of this yeast industry from the commercial standpoint; and in the shipments shown above will readily appear the widespread and magnitude of the demand for Corby Yeast, recognized as a real necessity by those bakers who put the proper estimate on quality; and appreciate the equitable price which did not prevail while the yeast business was held virtually under monopolistic control.

To require the closing of the Corby Yeast plant will automatically re-establish this monopoly-at a tremendous cost to the bakers everywhere.

It must be remembered that the making of yeast produces alcohol as a by-product. But the alcohol derived from the making of Corby Yeast has only been permitted for use in the arts, sciences and manufactures. How important the use in science alone is most interesting and illuminating.

The following letter from no less a distinguished authority than Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, chief chemist of the United States government, appearing in the Congressional Record of December 18th, 1916, officially emphasizes the necessity of alcohol in prosecution of chemical and other scientific work in laboratories; and that its elimination would mean the practical suspension of most of the important research work in which his department is engagedvital in its application to every-day life. .

> DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY, Washington, D. C., December 16, 1916,

HON. J. H. GALLINGER,

Very truly, yours,

United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR GALLINGER: Replying to your letter of December 14, inquiring whether the Government requires pure alcohol for use in scientific research and investigation in its laboratories, and what effect it would have upon such laboratories should they be prevented by law from securing pure alcohol, I beg to say that the Bureau of Chemistry does require pure alcohol for use in scientific research. If the Bureau of Chemistry were not permitted to use pure alcohol in its scientific research and in its analytical work in connection with the enforcement of the food and drugs act, much of the work now under way would be brought to a standstill. Alcohol is so largely used by chemists that it forms an essential reagent in the preparation of many substances and in the making of many analyses. If it were impossible to use it, and it would be necessary to endeavor to devise new methods of preparation and new methods of analyses for certain methods of preparation, long studies, possibly lasting years, would be required in order to find a substitute. For other methods of preparing certain substances it may be impossible to find a substitute.

In the place of analytical methods in which alcohol is used, entirely new methods would have to be devised, and to do so would require the work of many men extending over a long period. In certain cases it is altogether probable that no satisfactory substitute could be found. In short, to deprive the Bureau of Chemistry of the possibility of using pure alcohol in its work would hamper a great part of the work required by law to be done, and would make some, if indeed not all, of it permanently impossible. The obstacles thus imposed upon the bureau might to some degree be overcome through years of investigation, but even then only partially.

Very truly, yours, United States Senate.

Without alcohol, every laboratory-chemical, bacteriologic, physical, engineering, medical, etc.-would be helpless. Every educational institution would be compelled to give up its scientific course; or so curtail its scope as to be practically worthless.

It would be impossible to completely list the purely scientific and laboratory preparations which demand the use of alcohol; but from the great German work-Bluecher's "Auskunftsbuch fuer die Chemische Industrie," Volume 9, these conspicuous examples are quoted:

Acetal, Acetaldehyde, *Acetanilid, Acetonal, Acetone sulfité *Acetophenone *Lead acetate (sugar of lead), and all other Acetyl chloride, Acetic acid,

*(Medicinal uses)

*Aspirin *Adrenalin (synthetic), Aldol, *Alkaloids *Arsacetin. *Atoxyl, Cellulose acetate, *Camphor monobromate Celluloid, *Chloralamid, *Chloretone,

Tetrachloerthane and

Acetic anhydride,

Fruit ethers (flavoring extracts, synthetic), Fulminate of mercury, *Glycholic acid, Solidified alcohol, for burning, *Hexamethy lentetramin Indigo, synthetic, *Cacodyl compounds other similar solvents, *Cantharadin,

Casein (pure);

Rubber industry, especially in the form of de-rivatives Collodion, *Milk sugar. Ethereal oils *Pepsin, Photographic chemicals Plastic masses, Artificial silks, Soaps, Tobacco preparation,

C. L. ALSBERG, Chief.

Every authority recognizes in alcohol certain specific properties which make it absolutely indispensable for scientific work, in that it possesses a combination of properties unknown in any other substance. Its main uses in the laboratory are found under these five heads:

A. As a solvent; there are thousands of chemical substances which must, perforce, be studied in alcoholic solution; even a partial list of the names of these would be meaningless the non-technical man.

B. As a purifying agent; there are a vast number of chemical substances which must be purified in the course of laboratory work, and a majority of these are purified by treatment with alcohol or with some of its derivatives, such as ether, chloroform, acetic acid, etc.

C. As a precipitant; in both analytic work, and in the preparation of new compounds, as well as in the purification and study of known products, alcohol comes into constant use to remove from solution in other solvents the compounds

D. As a drying agent; especially in physiologic chemistry, alcohol, and its derivative, ether, are used for the removal of water from substances to be studied in their dry state, and which would be injured by heating to dry.

E. As a disinfectant and antiseptic; its use for this purpose is extensive and . so obvious as to require no comment.

The Corby Plant is strictly a yeast manufactory; and every gallon of the alcohol which its legally prescribed process produces has by strict understanding been sold and used ONLY in these important industries.
